RABBI'S FORUM

Rabbi Anthony Fratello
MAHL, DD

I had occasion recently to go through the closet in my office. This moment prompted our new Director of Education Alissa to remark, "I didn't even know you HAD a closet in your office!" In truth, I use that closet for a precious few things. I hang my white High Holy Day robe in it. I keep my tallit in it—that is when it is not tossed haphazardly on a chair. I also keep my Bema mic in there, so I never have to worry about losing it. The only other thing I use my closet for is to dump stuff that I am not sure what else to do with.

It was in that moment that I began to dig in what I now think of as: My closet of mystery. I found old wrapping paper, an inflatable Patrick Star costume that Eli used to wear as a STARY Mascot, and some yahrzeit candles. The most surprising thing that I found, however, was 44 sets of Tefillin! Tefillin—for those of you who may not know or may not remember—are phylacteries; ritual objects which feature a head piece and an arm piece. Both pieces contain parchments with the words of the Shema written on them, and observant Jews wear them during morning worship to fulfill what is written in the Shema: "Bind them as a sign upon your hand, let them be a symbol before your eyes." (Deut. 6:8)

Jewish boys born into Orthodox or Conservative Families are given a pair at the time of their Bar Mitzvah, the age at which one is obligated to wear them during Weekday Morning Worship. When those boys grow up and no longer wish to maintain that level of observance, or when a family member passes and the question arises: "What do we do with uncle Morty's Tefillin," the answer is frequently: Give it to the Rabbi. I just didn't realize I had amassed such a collection.

It got me to thinking, though. Old pairs of Tefillin or Tallitot (I have a bunch of these too) are not the only things that we sometimes shove into closets and forget about. We do this with many aspects of our faith: Our trust in God. Our observance of Mitzvot. Our support for Israel or Jewish Institutions. We grow out of them, or we decide they are no longer important to us, or when our family members die, we have no idea what to do with them. So, we tuck them away; hiding them in corners or dark recesses where they fade from our minds. But this is a mistake! Those ritual objects are valuable; not in a material sense, though sometimes that is the case. These objects are valuable because they remind us of our connection to God, to Judaism, and to the Jewish People. Sometimes we don't want to be reminded, sometimes it is easier to forget. But when we haul those things out it reminds us of different times when we were connected more to our tradition and our people. They remind us of our youth when things were carefree and easier.

The Holidays are upon us. We will gather and reconnect, and it will be good. We will bathe in the warmth of our faith and the camaraderie of fellowship. We may even make resolutions to do a better job of connecting with our Judaism in the year to come. And then… and then the year will get busy. We will be distracted by other needs. We will toss our connections back into the closet where we will promptly forget about them. Try not to do that this year. Try to keep your connections bound to your arms, and serving as symbols before your eyes. A year of living your Judaism may make your year the best one yet. At the very least, it couldn't hurt!

Cantor's Corner

Cantor Carrie Barry, MSM

There is something beautiful about the way the High Holy Days bring us together. Throughout the year, our lives can pull us in a thousand different directions. We have work and family, responsibilities and appointments, celebrations, and challenges. We may walk through our days surrounded by people and still sometimes feel very much on our own.

And then Rosh Hashanah arrives. We enter our sanctuary, hear familiar melodies, see familiar faces, and begin to sing the words that generations of Jews have sung before us. Perhaps we come filled with joy. Perhaps we come carrying grief. Perhaps we are looking forward to a new beginning, or perhaps we simply need a place to pause and breathe. Whatever we bring with us, we do not have to bring it alone. That, to me, is one of the great gifts of Jewish community.

The High Holy Days remind us that Judaism was never meant to be practiced entirely by ourselves. Even our most personal prayers are often written in the plural. We say Avinu Malkeinu — "Our Father (Parent), Our Sovereign." We ask for forgiveness not only for ourselves, but for us. We confess our shortcomings together. We sing together. We remember together. And when we say L'shanah tovah, we are not simply wishing ourselves a good year. We are wishing one another a year of blessing, health, meaning, and peace.

There is tremendous hope in that word: together. Because none of us knows what the coming year will bring. We cannot predict the joys or disappointments, the changes or challenges that await us. But we can choose how we will face whatever comes next. We can choose to be present for one another. We can choose to reach out, to listen, to celebrate another person's joy, and to sit beside someone in their sorrow.

Sometimes community means a large congregation filling a sanctuary and singing a familiar melody together. Sometimes it is much smaller: a phone call, a shared meal, a visit, a hug, or simply noticing that someone has not been around and asking, "How are you?" These seemingly small acts are how a community becomes more than a collection of individuals. They are how we remind one another: You belong here. You matter here. You are not alone.

As we enter this High Holy Day season, I hope we will give ourselves permission to truly be together. Let us put aside, even for a little while, the distractions that so often divide our attention. Let us listen to the music. Let us raise our voices. Let us open our hearts. Let us look around and recognize the people with whom we are sharing this sacred moment.

And perhaps, as we stand together and hear the sound of the shofar, we can hear its call as more than an invitation to personal reflection. Perhaps it is also a call to community — a reminder to wake up to one another, to reconnect, and to remember that we are stronger when we walk into the future together.

May this new year bring each of us hope. And may it bring us the courage to share that hope with one another. L'shanah tovah u'metukah — may we all be blessed with a good, sweet, and meaningful new year, together.

Education Director

Alissa Frankel, MSW

There is something special about this time of year. The school year is beginning, families are settling back into routines, and our Religious School community is coming together again. At the same time, we are preparing to celebrate the High Holy Days, the Jewish new year, and an opportunity to pause, reflect, and think about the year ahead.

Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur invite us to consider where we've been and where we want to go. What do we want to do differently? What do we want to do more of? What do we want to let go of? These are meaningful questions for adults, but they are also wonderful questions to explore together as a family.

As you gather around your Rosh Hashanah table, try asking everyone to share one intention for the year ahead. It could be something they hope to learn, a way they want to treat others, something they want to make more time for, or simply something they hope will bring them joy. You might even revisit your answers later in the year and see how things have changed.

And as the school year gets underway, don't forget to ask your children about their Religious School experiences, too. We all know that "How was school?" often gets the same answer: "Fine."

Try asking instead:

- What was the most interesting thing you did today?
- Tell me something you learned.
- What made you laugh today?
- Did anything surprise you?
- Was there anything that challenged you?
- What is something you want to know more about?
- If you were the teacher today, what would you have done?

There is a lot happening in our Religious School. Our students are learning, creating, praying, singing, asking questions, building friendships, and exploring what it means to be part of a Jewish community. We hope that what happens in the classroom doesn't stay in the classroom but becomes part of the conversations and experiences you share together at home.

As we begin both a new school year and a new Jewish year, I'm looking forward to all that this year will bring.

Shanah Tovah! May this be a year of learning, connection, growth, and joy for all of us.

From our President

Dr. Melissa Bowers

As the calendar turns to September, our Jewish calendar invites us to pause and recognize something deeper: The beginning of a new year.

Rosh Hashanah is more than the turning of a page. It is an invitation to reflect on where we have been, consider where we are going, and think about the person we hope to become. The High Holy Days give us something that can be difficult to find in the busyness of everyday life: permission to slow down, look inward, and begin again.

A new year does not require us to reinvent ourselves. Instead, it gives us the opportunity to renew ourselves.

Perhaps there is a relationship that deserves more attention. A kindness we have been meaning to offer. A grudge we are ready to release. A dream we have put aside. Or simply a part of ourselves that has been waiting for a little more time, patience, and care.

This year, I encourage each of us to think about one small way we can make the coming year more meaningful. Not a resolution that feels impossible to keep, but an intention that feels achievable. More connection. More gratitude. More generosity. More time with the people we love. More willingness to listen. More courage to try something new.

There is something especially meaningful about doing this as a community. When we gather together for the High Holy Days, we are reminded that none of us is on this journey alone. We celebrate, reflect, pray, sing, remember, and look toward the future together.

And as we enter this new year at Temple Shaarei Shalom, we have even more reason to look forward with excitement. Our congregation continues to grow and evolve, and the enhancements taking place are helping create spaces where we can gather, celebrate, learn, worship, and build memories together for years to come.

May this new year bring each of us the opportunity for renewal. May we have the courage to let go of what no longer serves us, the wisdom to appreciate what we have, and the hope to embrace what lies ahead.

From my family to yours, L'shanah Tovah! May 5787 be a year of health, happiness, connection, peace, and countless opportunities to begin anew.

Debbie Goldblatt is retired. She was a Quality Assurance Software Testing Manager and moved here from New Jersey at the end of November. Debbie's good friend, Fern Jurgrau introduced her to the Temple. She's been going to a lot of Friday night services and joined the Rabbi a couple of times for his walks at Green Cay. Debbie really likes the Rabbi and the Cantor. Both are very nice and easy to talk with - which makes her feel very comfortable.

Fred Wein was born in Brooklyn and grew up with Delicatessen and Appetizing in his blood from the time he was a little boy. His parents owned a delicatessen on 2nd Avenue and 6th Street in Manhattan and he could slice lox extremely thin! Fred has been in Boynton Beach for 34 years, but has a great story. He was in the 82nd Airborne Division during Viet Nam and did 12 or 13 jumps. Fred has four children and 8 1/2 grandchildren (the half is due in November or December), and two sisters. Fred was a Social Worker with the Department of Children and Families and worked on "adoption parties and Holiday parties. As a result over 60 adoptions occurred because of his efforts. He is active in Speak up for Kids. Fred lives with Sammy, his Shitzu service dog.

Dana and Tim McCarthy have been married for 10 years.They have 4 boys between them. Shaun, 22, and Daniel, 24, are both from Tim's first marriage. Tyler, 15, is from Dana's first marriage, and Chase, who is 9 is Dana and Tim's son together. Fun fact - Shaun and Daniel both attended Hebrew school at TSS, and Daniel was bar mitzvah'd there as well! Tim grew up New Jersey and works as a Speech Language Pathologist, and Dana grew up in New York and is a clinical psychologist. Chase is looking forward to starting Hebrew school at TSS with many of his buddies, and Dana and Tim are looking forward to celebrating their fourth and final bar mitzvah when it is his turn! The McCarthy's want to thank everyone for welcoming them into the community.
